photometric and spectroscopic detection of the primary ... - we report the detection of the primary transit of the extra-solar planet hd80606b, thanks to photometric and spectroscopic observations performed at observatoire de haute-provence, simultaneously with the ccd camera at the 120-cm telescope and the sophie spectrograph at the 193-cm telescope. photometric and spectroscopic observations of grb 140629a - we present our optical photometric and spectroscopic observations of grb 140629a. a redshift of $z = 2.275 \pm 0.043$ is measured through the metal absorption lines in our spectroscopic data. using our photometric data and multiple observational data from other telescopes, we show that its optical light curve is well interpreted with the near-ir photometric and optical spectroscopic study of the ... - we carried out near-ir photometric and optical spectroscopic observations of v582 aur, which is a fu orionis type object, to investigate any periodic and/or aperiodic variations. we obtained light curves on the scale of a night and a year, in j, h and ks bands with kasinics (kasi near infrared photometric and spectroscopic binary systems - springer - photometric and spectroscopic binary systems proceedings of the nato advanced study institute held at maratea, italy, june 1-14,1980 edited by ellen b. carling a photometric and spectroscopic study of selected southern ... - the system is further refined. a combined photometric and high-resolution spectroscopic study of the active binary hd 101379 provides evidence that its active star is a late g-type bright giant rather than a k4 star as suggested in a previous study. evidence that the source of its ha emission lies in the space between the stars is discussed. photometric, spectroscopic and orbital period study of ... - photometric observations and revised the light elements. hill & barnes (1972) published the orbital elements of the system based on the rst detailed spectroscopic observations and determined the spectral type as a7 v. they found the mass ratio (m_1 / m_2) to be 2.4 and the orbital inclination 76.7° . gulmen et al. (1993) found that at peg was a studying the photometric and spectroscopic variability of ... - circs themselves. recent high-precision photometric monitoring of the mid-o-type giant η per by the microvariability and oscillations of stars (most) microsatellite shows evidence of sig-natures of corotating bright spots at the surface of the star, with a potential link to its dac behavior (ramiaramanantsoa et al. 2014). multi-colour photometric and spectroscopic monitoring of ... - in this paper we present and analyse photometric data obtained over the period of december 1985 through december 1992 and spectroscopic data obtained on december 5 and december 7, 1986. 2. telescopes and instruments four telescopes were used for the observations, whereas all the observations were obtained at the eso (la silla, chile). photometric and spectroscopic study of seven ... - unam - the results of a spectroscopic and photometric study of shakhsbazian compact groups (shcgs3). shcgs were selected by an eye inspection of palomar sky survey prints as dense groups of mainly red galaxies. the groups are very dense formations: the space density in many of them reaches about 104 105 galaxies per mpc³. possibly due to compactness of photometric and spectroscopic study of the supergiant with ... - photometric and spectroscopic study 757 types, from late k to early b. photometric variability that can be due to various factors has been detected in many of them. in particular, semiregular brightness variations caused by pulsations are typical of yellow supergiants. in addition, the photometric behavior of michael s. bessell - caltech astronomy - michael s. bessell research school of astronomy and astrophysics, the australian national university, weston, act 2611, australia; email: bessell@msou keywords methods: data analysis, techniques: photometric, spectroscopic, catalogs abstract standard star photometry dominated the latter half of the twentieth spectroscopic failures in photometric redshift calibration ... - spectroscopic failures in photometric redshift calibration: cosmological biases and survey requirements carlos e. cunha, 1,2, dragan huterer, huan lin,3 michael t. busha2,4 and risa h. wechsler2 ,5 6 1department of physics, university of michigan, 450 church st, ann arbor, mi 48109-1040, usa photometric and spectroscopic analysis of eclipsing binary ... - photometric and spectroscopic data, certain properties and information about the system can be determined. binary star systems such as these can provide critical comparisons with models of stellar evolution, as they are relatively easy to measure and analyze. spectroscopic and photometric analysis of hs 1136+6646: a ... - extensive photometric and spectroscopic observations have been obtained for hs 1136+6646. the observations reveal a newly formed post-common-envelope binary system containing a hot dao.5primaryanda highly irradiated secondary. hs 1136+6646 is the most extreme example yet of a class of short-period hot h-rich
